We Can't End Sexual Violence Without Ending Racism

 May 25, 2021

As an organization committed to the mission of ending sexual harassment, assault, and abuse, we recognize it will take ending all forms of racism to accomplish this. Racism, specifically anti-Black racism, is a root cause of sexual violence. Harmful beliefs that view other groups as lesser – like sexism, heterosexism, transphobia, ableism, and racism – feed into the inequity and abuse that underscore all forms of sexual violence. In order to prevent sexual violence, we must acknowledge and take steps to undo the systemic ways anti-Black racism shows up in our communities and our work.

NSVRC and our partners at the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape have developed the following resources as a part of our ongoing work to interrupt racism within our own organization and the anti-sexual violence movement. Anti-Blackness and oppression are woven deeply into the fabric of our society. The work of anti-racism is a call to all individuals, communities, organizations, and institutions to change ourselves and the systems that surround us to build equity and respect.
